Static friction is therefore the net force acting on a braking car. $f_s = ma$. Replace f_s with its classical formula. $\mu_s N = ma$. Earlier, we assumed (quite sensibly) that

Friction Lab This lab will let you determine the coefficients of static friction and kinetic friction between different surfaces. You will be pulling with increasing tension until the object begins to slide and then you will keep the object moving at a slow steady speed. The graph below the action is a graph of the tension in the string.
